Lviv is the most unusual city in Ukraine, and its most colourful. It is Ukraine's one of most popular tourist destinations. Only Kyiv can compete with its beauty, grandness and number of amazing landmarks. Different eras, architectures, traditions, identities, temperaments, and histories have been woven into the common thread that is Lviv. On one hand, Lviv's grandness inspires awe in its guests; on the other, its openness, elegance and inimitable warm atmosphere make this city one of the warmest and most hospitable in Ukraine.

Lviv

The capital of the country's west, the city owes its fascinating appearance, reminiscent of Prague, Krakow and Vienna at once, to its bright and dynamic history, which has been changing and developing for over seven and a half centuries. By the end of 18th century, it became the centre for Polish, German, Jewish, and Ukrainian cultures at once. It also gained a reputation for its inventions and innovations: it was Lviv's pharmacists who invented kerosene, and a local blacksmith designed the first gas lamp.

Architecturally, the city manages to combine its European influences with Soviet-era leftovers in a remarkable manner, giving the city a peculiar charm. Despite being a rather large city, a unique calmness prevails here. It makes for pleasant strolls through the city's narrow cobblestone streets, filled with a medieval atmosphere. The unyielding sieges and occupations over the centuries of Lviv's history contributed to the formation of a powerful national identity, which helped Ukraine gain its independence in 1991, with Lviv as its spiritual capital and keeper of national identity. Lviv's historic centre can be called an outdoor museum. For good reason, it was included on the list of UNESCO's World Cultural Heritage sites – it has nearly two thousand historic, cultural and architectural monuments. The heart of the city, the Rynok Square, amazes with colourful houses, taken straight from the pages of fairy tales. In its centre stands the Town Hall, from which one can see breath-taking views of the city.
